Travis Cox will conduct Harding's Symphonic Orchestra in its first concert performance on December 6. The program, which will be in the American Heritage Auditorium, will include six symphony pieces.

Orchestra will debut in December concert

The Harding Symphony Orchestra will host its first major concert this year Dec. 6 in the American Heritage Auditorium under the direction of Travis Cox, assistant professor of music.

The program includes six pieces. The first movement of "The Brandenburg Concerto," the first selection, will feature three soloists: Ann Hamilton playing the violin, Karen Arnold the flute, Pam Bandy the contra bass clarinet and the trumpet solo will be done by Tom Ritchie.

"Prelude A L'Après-Midi D'Un Faune," by Claude Debussy, is the second piece, followed by "The Swan of Tuonela."

The second through the last movements of "Nutcracker Suite" is the fourth piece which will be presented. Mr. Cox pointed out that a special attraction will feature the first grade students from Harding Academy pantomining the Nutcracker Suite story.

The fifth piece, the first movement of "Symphonia Concerto," will feature soloists Kris Castle playing the contrabass and Mrs. Patricia Cox the viola.

The concert will climax with Beethoven's "First Symphony." "I'm proud that we'll be doing Beethoven's complete first symphony," said Cox. "Since the orchestra has just been organized this semester, it's remarkable that we're able to do an entire symphony of this magnitude. It's all due to the efforts and talents of the students."

No admission will be charged for the concert, which will last from 7:30 to 9 p.m. Other concerts are planned for the spring semester, the next major concert coming on April 25. According to Cox, it will be a Bicentennial Concert and concerto program featuring American music from 1776 to the present and a concerto prepared and performed by a Harding student.

The string quartet, string-wind octet, and woodwind quintet are to perform in chapel in December.

Also planned are children's concerts at Harding Academy and Searcy public schools. A narration of the story will accompany the music to "Peter and the Wolf," which they will perform then.

"The people in the orchestra this year were formed to play good music and enjoy the fruits of their labor," said Cox. "Everyone benefits: those who perform and those who hear the concert. We hope the program will grow, especially attracting more strings, which are the backbone of any orchestra."

Cox feels that Harding's orchestra is extremely helpful to music majors. "It exists to promote the repertoire for that medium. The music written for orchestra is very pertinent to a music major's background. So much study is devoted to the study of classical music, which includes that of orchestra."

S.A. Council to deliberate on dress code

Tonight the Student Association executive council will discuss Harding dress code during a closed meeting.

Last week the council started talking about the dress code but S.A. president Lot Therrio said that the members should gather further information on the effects of Title IX.

The meeting last week which lasted for almost two-hours had a variety of topics including conserving energy on campus, prayers in the Heritage cafeteria, Campaigns for Christ in White county and the children's home in Morrilton.

The council voted to investigate wasteful lighting around the Olen Hendrix building. They agreed to approach Lott Tucker, vice-president for finance, on the subject.

Charlie Coil, chairman of the spiritual life committee, proposed an "all school Exodus" campaigning for Christ in White County and at the Morrilton Children's Home. He also suggested that "the activities could culminate with Jimmy Allen's spring meeting in the new gymnasium."

Gilbert Melson, movie affairs chairman, proposed that "Camelot" be the movie used in a benefit to pay the balance of the S.A.'s debt for the new 35mm projector. He reported that about $600 was raised during last week's benefit movie program.

The council also referred the subject of unlimited cuts to the Academic affairs committee for research purposes.

The council discussed the matter of having prayers in the American Heritage Cafeteria at some length. The council decided that having the prayers said over the intercom would soon become a joke and would not be practical. It was suggested to have posters put up in the cafeterias which would encourage prayer.

Medical missionary displays African art

The Ekpo mask, left, and the wood carving of women's head from Nigeria are among the African art objects that are being displayed in the Art Gallery until Nov. 27. The objects are owned by Dr. Henry Farrar a local physician and former medical missionary. The show includes objects from Nigeria, Kenya, Uganda, Zambia, and Rhodesia.

Treasurer releases budget, outlines year's expenditures

Americans squander priceless resources

We are a nation of wasteful people. From crib to casket, we Americans are notorious for consuming, spending, and discarding an unequaled amount of precious resources, both natural and man-made.

Even the seemingly limitless supplies of our rich nation are endangered by citizens who have unashamedly destroyed and squandered the luxuriance and beauty of our land.

Perhaps we can all be thankful for the energy and economic crunch which have finally shocked us into realizing that nothing good lasts forever.

Sadly, it took an Arab embargo to expose the extravagant misuse of energy resources. It takes millions of dollars each year just to clean up and replace the parks used by thoughtless wasters. And, yes, it even takes wire fences to keep Harding students from turning lawns into barren dirt trails.

Attitudes must change in order to overcome the constant ebbing away of natural supplies and beauty. The good of all and the scarcity of supplies must become the guidelines for the decisions of intelligent consumers.

Optimistically, we look for the day when life will not be judged by material goods and riches but by its quality and efficiency. And may we begin in the cafeteria, on the lawn, and in recreation to consider the scarcity of time, money, and nature before wasting, destroying, or marring what we are privileged to have and use.

Shuptrine, Dickey recount picturesque South

By Tim McNeese
Jericho, The South Beheld by Hubert Shuptrine and James Dickey. Oxmoor House, 1974, 164 pages, $60.

JERICHO, the South Beheld is an emotional experience. Though the book bears many sides, each facet leads back to one point — that Shuptrine, the artist, and Dickey, the poet, have created a throbbing tale of the South, through which we are asked to experience pride, pity, piety, and prophecy fulfilled.

The book weighs seven pounds, which tells you something, but not everything. The immensity of its size is equaled only by the scope of its subject. The beauty of this work is endless as the two artists meander down mountain trails, race over dirt roads, wade in the Gulf until each block of prose and each watercolor creates a vivid image indelibly pressed upon the mind's eye.

Shuptrine, as a watercolorist, is superb. He was a recognized abstract painter until 1970; then he changed his style and became a watercolorist of the American realism school. His compositions seem very much influenced by Andrew Wyeth. His subjects include coonskins, hound dogs, Gullah fishermen, and a host of Southern themes. Even Shuptrine's buildings have character. Often his barns, mills, and cabins hold more meaning and insight than his people. But he is indeed a strong artist with a unique command of his medium, and he is as good in black and white as he is in color.

James Dickey, though he rambles, certainly "ain't just whistlin' Dixie." At points, Dickey's chunks of poetry carry a spiritual pretentiousness which transforms him into a literary Joshua leading us through the promised land flowing with moonshine and sorghum. Dickey milks the reader for all he is worth, carrying his emotional meanings even into his historical notes, which are disappointingly few. He rekindles the flames of Atlanta and revives Confederate ghosts back into battle with Joe Johnston.

The poet sees all in Jericho as being good, almost heaven. He fails to mention the Ku Klux Klan, lynching, tobacco, and watermoccasins, each just as deadly as the other, and all products of the South.

But Dickey is on a mystical journey, not a real one. Reality in the text may come and go. If you find yourself lost in the clouds of the spiritual, come back to Shuptrine's watercolors. They hold a closer grain of reality.

To these two Southern artists the South never fell; rather, it reached a mystical point in which time stood perfectly still. Although its church bells rusted and its barns began to lean, its people gained, daily, a spiritual insight into life.

Advice comes from inmate

Dear Editor:

After reading the following letter in the Memphis State Helmsman, I immediately wanted to share this outreaching opportunity with Harding students. I have told Lamar Robinson about our school and asked his permission to reprint this letter in the Bison. He is excited over the possibility of corresponding with any of you who would offer your friendship.

Dear Citizens: Please give me a few minutes of your time to let you know how a trip from drugs and alcohol can very easily end up.

This is not meant to disgrace anyone, but rather it is a written contribution from a very lonely man who loves you and has been there.

My name is Melvin Lamar Robinson, I am a 28-year-old white male and at this time an inmate in the Mississippi State Penitentiary, because of drugs and alcohol.

First, let me say, drugs and alcohol aren't the way to anything good. I didn't have anyone to tell me this, for I started at an early age. I had to learn this the hard way. This is why I am writing this article to you.

Please let me tell you about my trip from drugs and alcohol. At this time I am in a small nine by six foot cell, with only the few things I am allowed, serving 11 years. I don't get to go outside or enjoy any of the pleasures you now have from life. When you use drugs and alcohol, you're not only hurting yourself, you are also hurting the ones who love you and at times you may even hurt them physically.

I know you say, "This can't happen to me," but friends, I said the same thing. I was hooked bad on drugs and I would have killed for another shot of dope. So you see, I was one of the lucky ones. I watched my brother die from an overdose, and didn't have enough sense to know it, because I was on one of those so-called good trips that everyone talks about.

I could go on forever telling you what drugs and alcohol have cost me, but I hope with all my heart that you can see that this may very easily be you, lying here in this cold, lonely cell writing this letter. Please don't destroy your beautiful selves for a trip on drugs and alcohol.

Those who share my feelings on this, please feel free to write, for I'd enjoy hearing from you.

Please write to: Melvin Lamar Robinson, MSU No. 37470, Parchman, Miss. 38738.

Surely an answer to a lonely young man's needs will let him know that Christians are caring people. Lamar (and I) are expecting you to come through with an overwhelming response.

Fifth Column

Writer hates Thanksgiving

By Wayne Morgan

I hate Thanksgiving! That's right, you heard me. I hate THANKSGIVING!!!

Why, you ask?

I'll put it to you simple like. After Thanksgiving there is nothing worth living for in school except Christmas.

You see, after Thanksgiving, finals hit you in the face. Who likes to come back to school for finals when he knows he has to ace the tests to even get a "D?"

Thanksgiving is also the first break after mid-term grades come out — who likes to face his parents after mid-term grades?

Of course, by Thanksgiving time you know what your grades are going to be and you hate to say anything about them when your parents ask. Usually you try to change the subject when your parents ask the question about your grades, but trying to discuss inflation's effect on America's economy is pretty hard when you're flunking economics.

Thanksgiving is also the time that your real prejudices show through. You know, when you have to choose between white or dark meat. I want everyone to know that I eat dark meat even though I'm from Alabama.

Thanksgiving is also the time when people start talking about their forefathers that came over to America to eat with the Indians. How we cherish this meal. I always wondered what General Custer's family thought about Thanksgiving.

The Thanksgiving holiday also prompts people to ask questions on how other countries celebrate this holiday. What people don't realize is the fact that no one else celebrates Thanksgiving. According to Frank Worgan, visiting professor of Bible from England, the English celebrate Thanksgiving on the Fourth of July.

Thanksgiving time is when your wife, who tries to save money, tells you that the story about the pilgrims eating turkey was a lie just like Washington cutting down the cherry tree, so you'll eat meatloaf instead of turkey.

Thanksgiving is one of the four holidays during the year that the Weight Watcher's group is considering making off-limits to its members.

There are only two reasons why I can stand having Thanksgiving:

1. Because without it the new expression "you turkey" would never have come into existence.
2. I love to stuff myself with good food like bread stuffing.

You know come to think about it Thanksgiving really isn't that bad. When Thanksgiving holidays come around we don't have to put out a Bison two weeks in a row. And that saves a lot of headaches!

So have a very Happy Thanksgiving and I hope that you eat enough to "stuff" yourselves.

Agents to provide career information

Representatives from 15 government and state agencies will be on campus Wednesday, Dec. 3, to provide information about careers in government.

The representatives will have tables set up in the Hammon Student Center from 10 a.m. until 2:30 p.m.

Students may talk with the representatives of any agency. "As tight as the job market is, this will be an excellent opportunity for students to learn more about a career in a government. I'm encouraging students to spend their free periods talking with these representatives," said David Crouch, Director of the Placement Office.

Agencies to be represented include the Veterans Administration, the Navy, the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms, the Internal Revenue Service, the National Weather Service, the National Center for Toxicological Research, the U. S. Secret Service, the State of Arkansas;

The Small Business Administration, the Veterans Administration Hospital, the Social Security Administration, the Civil Service Commission, the Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service, the U.S. State Department and the Corp of Engineers.

Early registration to alleviate rush

Students should pre-register before the end of the fall semester, according to Virgil Beckett, Registrar, to make counseling and sectionizing faster and more efficient.

Juniors and seniors, after counseling and obtaining a trial study schedule, should go to the Registrar's Office to receive their IBM packets during Dec. 1 to 5.

Students must go to the individual department chairman to obtain each class card for registration purposes.

Completed cards should be taken to the Registrar's Office in the Administration Building.

Sophomores can begin counseling and sectionizing Dec. 8 through 12.

Freshmen should begin sectionizing on Jan. 5 at 1 p.m. until Jan. 6 at noon.

Students who do not pre-register must counsel, sectionize and register Tuesday, Jan. 6.

Computer hums within Administration building

By Bill Peterson

Deep within the bowels of the administration building basement is a room where a constant whirr of machinery and clatter of keyboards can be heard. There, in the center of the room like a king on the throne, stand three tall, gleaming, gray and red cabinets packed with electronic gadgetry that only a computer man could appreciate — Harding College's new computer system.

The computer, affectionately known as PDP 11-45, contains 1,500 different programs and data files. It has a storage capacity of ten full four-drawer filing cabinets, and each of its magnetic tapes will hold the equivalent of 500,000 punched cards.

The $200,000 system is operated by staff members Gene Dugger, John Nunnally and Gene Ward, plus six part-time student programmers.

Dugger explained that the computer will speed up routing business for virtually every department in the college, besides storing data on all alumni, students, and applicants for admission.

That's all very impressive, but how does the PDP 11-45 benefit the average Harding student? Dugger pointed out two ways.

"The computer should speed up the flow of information so that a student won't have to spend as much time standing in lines as he does now," Dugger said.

One of the lines to be abolished is the one on registration day. In fact, the computer will make possible the complete elimination of registration day.

Registration activity will be scheduled between the student and advisor during the school year. The advisor will, with the help of a computer terminal, complete all registration procedures in a matter of minutes.

Full computer operations should be in progress by July, 1976, with the first computer registration the following semester.

Dugger said the second way the student is helped by the computer is through direct contact with it.

"Some students are getting experience now as programmers for the school," said Dugger, "but eventually, I'd like to see computer internships made available, and have co-op students down here working with the computer."

He said that Harding may someday offer minors in computer application to go along with the student's major field of study.

"Almost every field is experiencing an increase in the use of the computer," Dugger said. "Such fields as art, music, language and journalism have not traditionally been known as computer-related fields, but they are now."

"We will be able to provide the student with an idea of how the computer is used in his field," he continued. "It can be a tool for anyone who chooses to make use of it."

Dugger said that another possible role of the computer is Computer Assisted Instruction (CAI).

In CAI, the computer is used as a tool in the educational process to teach the student basic principles of a course, freeing the teacher to handle individual problems the student is having.

"The computer can issue an exam and grade it as the student takes it," Dugger said, "so CAI allows him to move at his own pace."

Dugger would someday like to see a local chapter of the Association for Computing Machinery (ACM) at Harding.

"ACM offers the computer student involvement in what's going on all across the country in the computer field," Dugger said.

He said that the ACM gives students the opportunity to hear many speakers talk about different phases of the computer field, and the periodicals the association offers are useful in keeping up with the constant advances in computer technology.

Dugger sees Harding's new computer playing a big part in the academic future of many students.

"A student at Harding today has 100 times more opportunity to learn about computers than before this system was put in," he said, "and the next five years should see an even more drastic change in the opportunities for students."

Anyone who listens very long to Gene Dugger and his friend the PDP 11-45 will be convinced that the Computer Age has indeed arrived at rustic Harding College.

Cathode Ray Tube (CRT) terminal receives input in departmental programs.

Trip to help selecting shows

Eight members of the S.A. and the Social Affairs Committee traveled to Dallas, Tex., last week to watch and gather information on groups and performing agencies for future concerts on campus.

They watched 15 contemporary groups perform their regular campus programs and collected information on 100 more.

They also attended forums and sessions explaining how to better contract, publicize, and present a show, get better effects, and in general get more for the students' money.

"One main advantage of the conference was that we could see the exact replica of a show... we were able to tell what the groups are really like. It's not like ordering out of a catalog, or by phone or letter, where you don't really know what you're getting," explained Suzie Carey, Social Affairs Committee chairman, "But this way we can be more selective in choosing entertainment that's best suited for the students here."

According to Miss Carey groups with more diversified programs than those previously on campus are being planned for next semester.

Groups they saw included Shiloah Morning, Sami Jo, Laurie Jacobs, David Alan Coe, and the Wright Brothers Overland Stagecoach Co.

"Although those we saw and gathered information on are prime prospects," said Miss Carey, "we're not limited to them only."

Others who attended the four-state regional conference were Dean Altman and Dr. Barnes, sponsors, and Lot Therrio and Gilbert Melson;

Diane Goodspeed, Alan Tomme, Mona Smelser, Benjie Nall, and Kathy Lewis.

M.D. presents anti-abortion view

By Lesa Schofield

Dr. Jim Citty, a Searcy physician, spoke last Tuesday night on his anti-abortion views in conjunction with the Right-to-Life association.

He addressed a group of women students as part of a health education class under Kathryn Campbell.

"Abortion," said Dr. Citty, "is bringing to a premature ending the process of fetal development... in other words, to stop something that is already underway."

According to law, abortion is legal until the sixth month of pregnancy. By that time, the fetus has developed definite human characteristics, Dr. Citty explained.

"More lives are taken in abortion in one year than the total lives taken in all wars," he said.

Much controversy exists concerning the beginning of life, he explained. Three opinions are generally held. Some believe that life does not begin until birth.

Dr. Citty in his presentation cited several biblical references to support his view that life begins before birth, at conception.

Dr. Citty supported his explanation with slides of fetal development, showing the succession of growth, as well as the methods of aborting a fetus.

At three weeks, the heart of the fetus begins to beat. At six weeks movement begins along with functioning of the brain.

The brain is completely formed and fingerprints appear at the eighth week after conception.

"At 11 to 12 weeks, all organs are functioning," said Dr. Citty, "and only growth in size remains."

Dr. Citty described with slides four methods of abortion used today. "All of these are cruel, and all end in the same place... a bucket at the end of the surgeon's table."

Students get recognition from firm

Several Harding students received awards for their work this past summer at Southwestern Bible Company's annual awards banquet, Saturday, Nov. 15, at the Sheraton Inn in Memphis.

Jeff Schlender, a senior, received the top award achieved by a Harding student. Schlender was placed in the President's Club, which required that he sell $2,500 or more in one week.

Schlender was also placed in the Century Club which consists of the top 10 percent of the men working with the company.

Sophomore Glen Elliot won the Tough-Minded Businessman's Award. This award requires that one quote his pay for the entire summer to the penny.

Gold Seal Awards, representing the accomplishment of working 80 hours each week of the summer was given to sophomore David Barnett, sophomore Amos Allen, senior Mike Brasher, junior Kenny Harris, sophomore Ed Sauter, junior Allan Stanford, and freshman Mitch Rush.

Superstar Awards went to Allen, Harris, Rush, Brasher, Stanford, and Sauter.

Senior Doug Cox was recognized for improving 100 percent over his first year in sales.

Seniors D. Mark Moore and Schlender were honored for having weeks of $2,000 or more in sales.

Trustees await report before Title IX verdict

Harding's Board of Trustees is still awaiting word from the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare officials explaining procedures in seeking exemptions to portions of Title IX that violate religious tenets before decisions are made on compliance.

Title IX is the section of the Education Amendment of 1972 that forbids federal assistance to any education program that practices discrimination on the basis of sex.

Harding College is not alone in its decision to seek exemptions to certain portions of Title IX that would violate religious tenets held by the college. A legal notice explaining the college's position was in Oct. 31 issue of the Bison.

Brigham Young University, which is affiliated with the Church of the Latter-Day Saints (Mormon), has purchased advertising space in newspapers to announce that it will not comply with certain portions of the federal government's Title IX.

The trustees of Brigham Young took out advertisements to notify the public that they "support the non-discrimination laws and have modified various university policies or procedures which in the past may have been interpreted as discrimination on the basis of sex."

They also used the ads to serve notice that the university would not comply with the certain specific portions of the rules.

The university charged that the federal rules exceed the government's legal authority, infringe on the university's religious freedom, and undermine the Mormon church's moral tenets.

The trustees repudiate six of the 43 sections of the rules, which they said:

—Would allow the federal government to regulate those programs or activities not supported by federal funds.

—Would give the government the authority to determine whether the institution qualified for religious exemptions.

—Would forbid the university from asking applicants about pregnancy, abortion, or marital status.

—Would nullify its dress code.

—Would prohibit private donors from designating single-sex scholarships.

—Would regulate university athletic offerings.

According to Brigham Young officials, only about $1.3 million in research awards would be jeopardized if H.E.W. decided to cut off federal aid to the college because of its refusal to comply with all the rules.

Also students receiving veterans' benefits or other government-sponsored financial aid would not be eligible to use their awards at the institution.

The advertisement also announced that the university would continue to administer separate dress codes for men and women despite the Title IX injunction that members of the opposite sexes be treated equally.

The advertisement said that the university believe that differences in dress and grooming of men and women are proper expressions of God-given difference in the sexes. Female student at the University are not allowed to wear jeans, while male students are not allowed to wear their hair below their ears.

According to Harding College's president, Dr. Cliff Ganus, the college does not directly receive any federal support so the college could simply refuse to comply with Title IX.

"But that is impossible," he explained, "because of the approximately 1,000 students who receive federal aid in the form of grants, loans, Social Security, and veteran's benefits."

Sigma Tau Delta inducts English honor students

Harding's chapter of Sigma Tau Delta, a national honor English society, inducted eight new members at a meeting recently.

Invitation for membership is based on a 3.0 G.P.A. in English and 3.0 overall. Members are also required to have taken two upper-level literature courses.

The new members are Ellen Brenneman, Linda Campbell,

Linda Daugherty, and Kent Johnson; Sherry McFadden, Bill Peterson, Karyn Phillips, and Bonnie Ulrey.

Several faculty members also joined the society this semester. They are Dr. Jo Cleveland, Mr. Rod Brewer, Mrs. Elizabeth Dykes, Mrs. Alice Jewell, Mr. Ed White, and Mr. Duane McCampbell.

In the four years that these Bisons have played, Harding has rolled up an exceptional 27-13-1 standard, participated in their last game against Central Arkansas Saturday. Not pictured is receiver Doug Owen.

Harding places fifth in AIC

Harding's lose over Central Arkansas Saturday kept the Bisons from a losing season as they wrapped up the 1975 grid-iron schedule with a 5-6 mark, 3-4 in the Arkansas Intercollegiate Conference which was good enough for fifth place behind Ouachita Henderson State, Southern State, and Central Arkansas.

In a season filled with ups and downs, the Bisons will be looking forward to next season with great anticipation. Perhaps the high point of the season was Joe David Smith's obliteration the Harding single game rushing record with an unbelievable output of 284 yards.

Faced with the possibility of finishing in the cellar if beaten by the University of Arkansas at Monticello, Smith responded by taking over the position of injured tailback Alan Grieb, who came up with an arm injury before the UAM game. By halftime the junior flash from Newport had rolled up an incredible 166 yards to keep the Weevils in the hole. It took a 43 yard dash by Smith late in the game to take the Bisons out of trouble after the Weevils had driven all the way to the Harding two-yard line with the score only 23-25 in the Bisons favor. Smith also scored two of the three Bison touchdowns that evening.

A lot of newcomers came into the picture this season to help the Bisons fortunes considerably. Robert Bridges demonstrated that he came to play football, usually forcing numerous turnovers when playing the end position. Junior college transfer Robert Akins was a surprise, having five interceptions going into the final game of the season. This is even more outstanding considering the Bisons all time record is only 11. Akins three-theft performance against Arkansas Tech also set a single game record for Harding.

Freshman Cam Prock stepped into the college ranks to perform well enough to start several games. After Jeff Smith was lost for the season due to an injury and Steve Peebles was hampered by illness, Prock was thrown into the fray with only his high school experience to fall back on. Prock passed for 190 yards in Harding 27-0 conquest of Northwest Oklahoma.

Although not a newcomer, Randy Miller came into his own this season, ranked nationally throughout the seasons with a 16 tackle per game average. Harding will miss the services of Ted Walters, stalwart fullback who has started for Harding for the past four seasons. One of the best blocking backs Harding has ever had Walters was exceptionally tough in short yardage situations.

Well, another season has come and gone. The halftime performances are over and the press box is closed for the winter, but with a number of returnees expected with an upgraded schedule, the Bisons are eager for 1976.

Lambuth spoils home opener

Lambuth College jumped out a quick advantage and held off late challenges to spoil the Bisons home opener 73-64 in non-conference cage action Friday.

Playing without the services of All-American forward Butch Gardner, the Bisons fell behind the visitors from Jackson, Tenn., 23-10 in the first 10 minutes of the contest and could never quite catch up. Gardner, who is averaging 24.5 points this season, slipped in pre-game warm up drills, twisting his ankle in pre-game warmups to prevent his seeing action.

After the Eagles jumped out to a fast 4-0 start, a bucket by Jerry Morgan with 16:46 showing put the Bisons close at 8-6. However, Lambuth then exploded out-scoring the Bisons 23-6 over a ten minute stretch to grab an imposing 31-12 lead with 7:01 left in the half. A basket by Slim Winston just before halftime left the Bisons down 41-21 going into intermission.

Although the Eagles made the first score of the second half, the Bisons came back to score eight consecutive points to cut the deficit to 45-29. A basket and a big three point play by the Eagles Godfrey Patterson, however, put the rally on the skids as Lambuth regained a 52-31 with 13:20 left in the game.

Still refusing to fold, sharp shooting by Morgan and Gary Baker pulled the Bisons to back within 11, 67-56 with 4:35 left as the Harding crowd came to life.

This time four consecutive free throws by Ricky Delk stalled the Bisons drive as they were faced with a 15 point deficit with less than four minutes left. A pair to tallies by Winston and a last second shot by Joey Williams left the final score 73-64.

Morgan and the Eagles Ricky Delk were the games top scorers with 22 while Godfrey pumped in 20. The Bisons scorers were Baker, 14; Winston, 11; Mark Goode, 11; with Tony Sneed, Randy Reynolds, and Williams each scoring 2. Winston had a standput night on the boards, picking off a total of 21 rebounds.

Earlier in the week, the Bisons traveled to Springfield, Miss., and raced past the Evangel Crusaders 86-75 for their first victory of the year.

Winston and Butch Gardner came out shooting to propel the Bisons into a quick 8-0 lead and they were never headed. Reserve forward Bill McIntosh came off the Crusader bench to hit six consecutive baskets to keep the Bisons from blowing the taller Evangel squad off the court. Although his spree put Evangel to within nine at 30-21, a 16 point flurry by the Bisons late in the half gave Harding a 50-34 half-time bulge.

With Sneed and Winston connecting, the Bisons racked up the first five points of the second half to grab their biggest lead of the evening 55-34. Harding then managed to hold the Crusaders at bay until the Eagles made a serious run at the Bisons late in the battle. Evangel fought to within 11 but consecutive tallies by Gardner, Sneed, and Baker finally put the game out of reach 81-64 with only 2:34 remaining to be played.

Gardner led the attack with 25 points, 15 in the first half. Morgan chipped in with 17 while Winston added 16.

Tuesday night the Bisons will play host to the David Lipscomb Bisons. The Bisons split both games with Lipscomb last season and may have to play again without Gardner.

Women's sports has two sides

Much has been said both pro and con concerning the future of women's intercollegiate sports at Harding, especially in light of the controversial Article IX ruling passed last year.

Although the ruling has yet to be fully interpreted as it relates to the status of the private colleges, a lot of opinions have been kicked around by both dissenters and supporters of such a measure.

On one side, critics maintain that allowing Harding to have such a program would result in the appearance of immodestly dressed women in our field house and might lead to a wave of unfemininity across campus. Some opponents believe that Harding lacks the funds and the personnel to carry on such a program and that Harding girls get all the exercise they need in club and intramural competition anyway. Still others are troubled that such participation would compromise Christian ethics.

On the other side of the fence, proponents argue that if the college can afford to field nine men intercollegiate teams, then surely something can be done for the women. Some have advanced the idea that opposition to the program is basically the result of attempts to preserve some sort of outdated code of female conduct and others have felt compelled to cry "chauvinist!"

As relating to the question of female decency, visiting teams could hardly be more scantily dressed than are some of the visiting cheerleaders that are hand for some of the men's basketball games. As for the decency of our own girls, they would be still subject to the same rules and regulations that they are under at the present.

I can't speak for the administration or even the girls, but I do think that there is much more to athletics than just exercise. If that were true, we would not have reinstituted the men's intercollegiate program in the late '50's.

Perhaps the major difference between intramural and interschool athletics lies in the sense of accomplishment, the satisfaction of achievement, or just the chance to reach out for goals. It is one thing to be a guy who can pump through 40 points a game in intramurals, and quite another to be someone who is just good enough to make the varsity team. Could it be that in a school that prides itself for excellence in all things, some people have overlooked the real plea that the girls are making?

Rulings, court decisions, regulations, codes, government, etc., just what do all these things have to do with sports and just what is the real issue at stake.

The fact is that if a woman has a talent and interest in music, she can take advantage of the band and A Capella programs. If a girl happens to have good speaking skills and is intelligent, she can try her hand in debate or in the speech program. There is even room for the woman who has the ability and interest to represent her college in intercollegiate business games.

However, if a girl happens to have some ability to throw a basketball through a hoop, hit a volleyball, smash a backhand, or catch a fly, she has to resign herself to being the Wednesday night wonder that no one ever sees.

I wouldn't trade my intercollegiate cross country letter for all the intramural trophies the school has to offer. Is it really so hard to see what the girls really want and why?

Harding has been blessed with far-sighted administration that has kept this school alive and has directed it a position of great prestige. We have had nationally recognized competitors in cross country, football, track, basketball, bowling, debate, music, business, publications and many other fields. Why not women's athletics?
